Concerning the leaders of the movement, of whom so much has already been written, only a few remarks will be made here, the intention being rather to cry back and to discuss the efforts of the lesser known men who link up the painters of 1830 with those of 1870. It is my object to show that the Englishmen who painted in the methods of the French impressionists, and were frequently charged with being mere imitators, as a matter of fact merely brought back their own, and carried on the traditions and discoveries of their most honoured Academicians at the most brilliant period in the history of the Royal Academy. In studying this interesting subject I have been more and more impressed by the enormous influence which British painting of the period of 1790 to 1850 had upon the inception of the impressionist...
